The National Security Policy and Plan (2019 – 2022)

Office of the National Security Council

Office of the Prime Minister

Foreword

National security is a vital foundation for the nation's progress, prosperity, resilience against problems and effective preparedness. For this reason, the Cabinet passed a resolution on 3 September 2019 to approve the National Security Policy and Plan (2019-2022) proposed by the Office of the National Security Council as the principal framework for the prevention, warning, resolution or suppression of threats and for the maintaining of national security. The National Security Policy and Plan (2019 – 2022) were prepared through the collaboration of various sectors in providing opinions, suggestions, strategic goals, indicators and strategies for all aspects of national security. It also includes the assessment and analyses of future security trends within the internal and external security contexts, study of the National Strategy, the National Reform Plan and the 12th National Economic and Social Development Plan (2017 – 2022), the National Strategy's Master Plan, the policies/strategies of relevant ministries and allocated budgets.

According to the Cabinet resolution on Guidelines for the submission of the Cabinet's consideration, passed on 4 December 2017, the National Security Policy and Plan (2019 – 2022) is considered a second-level plan devised to support the National Strategy, which is the first-level plan. In implementing the National Security Policy and Plan (2019 – 2022), relevant state agencies will formulate their own strategies, plans or projects corresponding to the National Security Policy and Plan (2019 – 2022) or the national security operation plans or collaborative projects to achieve maximum security benefits and national interests. The Office of the National Security Council shall act as the key monitoring agency for these operations.

To be successful, all sectors must join forces in collaborative and integrative implementation of the National Security Policy and Plan (2019 – 2022) to achieve the tangible outcomes of national security, prosperity and sustainability.

The National Security Policy and Plan (2019 – 2022)

Part 1 : Introduction

1.1 Principles and rationale

Whereas Section 52 of the Constitution of the Kingdom of Thailand, B.E. 2560 (2017) stipulates that the State shall protect and uphold the monarchical institution, independence, sovereignty, integrity of the territories and the areas over which Thailand has the sovereignty rights, honor and interest of the Nation, security of the State, and public order. Hence, for these purposes, the State shall provide efficient military, diplomatic, and intelligence services for the purpose of national development, in conjunction with Section 13 of the National Security Council Act, B.E. 2559 (2016) which stipulates that the Cabinet shall have the National Security Policy and Plan established, with the National Security Council's recommendation, the Office of the National Security Council hereby formulates the present National Security Policy and Plan.

The formulation of the said National Security Policy and Plan shall be in accordance with Section 14 of the National Security Council Act, B.E. 2559 (2016) which stipulates that the National Security Policy and Plan must coherently address domestic and foreign policies as well as military, economic and other national security policies to ensure close collaboration among state agencies for constructive national security, and they must at least specify the national security goals and implementation guidelines for the following issues: 1) To strengthen the security of the nation's key institutions and the democratic regime of government with the King as Head of State; 2) To protect and uphold national interests; 3) To promote the national preparedness system and national defense capability; and 4) To maintain national and international security. Formulation of the National Security Policy and Plan shall also be in accordance with Section 5 Paragraph Three of the National Strategy Preparation Act, B.E. 2560 (2017) which stipulates that the Cabinet shall determine its policies on the administration of state affairs before assuming the administration of state affairs, and the preparation of the National Economic and Social Development Plan, the National Security Policy and Plan and any other plans, including the preparation of annual appropriations must be consistent with the National Strategy.

Upon the royal promulgation enacting the National Security Policy and Plan, the Cabinet or state agencies must adopt them as the frameworks or guidelines for the execution of their powers and duties in preparing the state affairs administrative plans, legislative plans, specific strategies and security plans, the national preparedness plan, the crisis management plans related to the national security or plans/projects related to the National Security Policy and Plan or any other operation that are in line with the National Security Policy and Plan.

1.2 Preparation process

Section 21(2) of the National Security Council Act, B.E. 2559 (2016) stipulates that the Office of the National Security Council shall prepare drafts of the National Security Policy and Plan in compliance with the goals and guidelines prescribed by the National Security Council for submission to the Council together with Section 13 Paragraph Two which stipulates that in formulating the National Security Policy and Plan, the Council shall organize hearings to solicit opinions from relevant state agencies and the public.

The Office of the National Security Council subsequently submitted drafts of the National Security Policy and Plan to the National Strategy Committee for consideration pursuant to Section 5 Paragraph Three of the National Strategy Preparation Act, B. E. 2560 (2017) and the Cabinet resolution, passed on 4 December 2017, regarding guidelines for Cabinet submission of plans. The drafts National Security Policy and Plan were then submitted to the Cabinet for approval.

The Office of the National Security Council also complied with Section 13 Paragraph Three of the National Security Council Act, B.E. 2559 (2016) which stipulates that announcement and revision of the National Security and Plan shall be issued as a royal command to be promulgated in the Government Gazette.

Part 2 : Security situations and contexts (2019 - 2022)

2.1 Shifting global security contexts

2.1.1 International politics: There is a trend toward a multipolar system of global politics in which Russia and China are challenging the United States' influence. However, the cooperation between the United States, Japan, Australia and India under the Quadrilateral Security Dialogue (QUAD) framework will strengthen the United States' roles as the forerunner of Asian security. In addition, the impacts of emerging powers on the global economy, especially the BRICS grouping of Brazil, Russia, India, China and South Africa, have significantly increased in the international arenas, with the intention of becoming more involved in determining the regulatory framework for the global economy. These major shifts in the global economy and international finance toward a new balance of power pose challenges to the existing world order both in terms of world politics and economy. Such development forces Thailand to adopt more flexible international policies to maintain its international relations balance with the superpowers. Moreover, the world is also facing the important global issues of energy, natural resource and environmental security as well as natural disasters, especially the search for new energy sources which may lead to international conflicts. At the same time, other environmental issues such as climate change also have direct impacts on the occurrence of severe natural disasters. International cooperation to address global environmental problems is, therefore, imperative and tends to result in more interventions by the superpowers in the forms of new international relations regulations which can be used as an excuse for the introduction of new trade protectionist measures.

2.1.2 Possession of nuclear weapons and weapons of mass destruction: The expansion of the sphere of influence and the development of nuclear weapons and weapons of mass destruction capability by many countries are the contributing factors to international tension and distrust. It also leads to the rise in the smuggling of material/equipment for the production of weapons and the terrorist groups' use of production technology and R&D data to develop more destructive weapons. Such developments are major concerns that require more international cooperation to address the issues. There have been efforts by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to press the international community into implementing the following measures: 1) To raise awareness of the importance of nuclear security at the state level; 2) To have countries preparing action plans to address nuclear and radioactive threats; 3) To encourage data sharing and collaboration between state agencies of countries with adjacent borders; and 4) To support the organizing of trainings in detection of nuclear and radioactive materials smuggling.

2.2 Shifting regional security contexts

2.2.1 Increasing influences and roles of the superpowers in Southeast Asian region: There have been policy shifts among the superpowers that indicate a tendency toward increasing competition and expansion of their influence, both military and economic, for their national interest. The competition is especially fierce between the United States and China as both countries try to secure alliance from small and medium - sized countries. While the United States follows the Indo-Pacific

Strategy, China adopts the Belt and Road Initiative (BRI) Strategy with the goals of securing economic, trade, investment and the inter-regional infrastructures connecting Asia, Africa and Europe. To achieve these goals, China tries hard to extend its political and diplomatic influences over ASEAN countries which resulted in more regional conflicts. However, the region's current forms of interception-engagement, blockage and collaborative relations with the superpowers have forced small and medium - sized countries to be more cautious in maintaining a balance in their relations with the superpowers. Nevertheless, Thailand's geographical advantages can be utilized to advance her economic policies among other countries in the region, especially the Eastern Economic Corridor (EEC) policy that can be linked to China's BRI policy and the Indonesia-Malaysia-Thailand Growth Triangle (IMT – GT) policy.

2.2.2 Expansion of regional international relations: ASEAN countries are rapidly moving toward more “political, security, economic and social integration and cohesiveness” under the ASEAN Community Visions 2025. This vision will result in the strengthening of political and economic cooperation among ASEAN member countries through regional transportation routes. Nevertheless, challenges to the ASEAN Community come from their diverse political and economic systems. The promotion of the sense of community and open interaction among member countries, especially on the issue of free population movement within the region, can create security risks for ASEAN member countries. Such risks include the rise of transnational crimes, black economy, drug and human trafficking problems. In addition, ASEAN is still facing the challenge of how to maintain national security while engaging with the superpowers, including the South China Sea conflicts among several ASEAN member countries.

Nevertheless, the relations among ASEAN member countries are relatively unified with no tendency toward any internal discord. At present, ASEAN is striving toward becoming a perfect community and aims to achieve more cooperation and unity.

2.2.3 Territorial conflicts and the use of military forces: Thailand has positive relations with the neighboring countries with no border conflicts that require the use of military forces. Although there are still some misunderstandings and distrust which may lead to conflicts, the degree of violence caused by such problems are localized due to the close relations and cooperation that exist at all levels as well as the strong preventive diplomacy and positive cooperation within the region and the ASEAN Community. However, based on the existing regional conflicts together with the internal situations of Thailand's neighboring countries, the roles that the superpowers play within the region and the territorial disputes, both land and sea, that Thailand has with several neighboring countries, the risk of military dispute in the region still remains. This fact is apparent from the increased military budgets of many countries in the region. Escalation of conflicts and lack of mutual cooperation to efficiently deal with the problem can lead to the use of military forces.

2.2.4 Maritime security and interests: Thailand's maritime interest is highly valuable due to its geopolitical importance, strategic location on the regional maritime route and abundant maritime natural resources. These factors are the reasons why the superpowers have keen interests in maintaining and expanding their influence in the region. Major threats to the region's maritime security are: maritime territorial dispute, competition for maritime interests, uncertainty over the South China Sea, maritime terrorism, man-made environmental degradation, enforcement of maritime laws, maritime industrial problems, maritime smuggling of goods, materials and instruments with potential for the production of weapons of mass destruction, drugs and military weapons, illegal migration, piracy, maritime disaster and natural disaster that may have impacts on the risk to the maintaining of the balance of maritime security and interests.

The overall maritime security of Thailand is still normal and suitable for tourism and international trade. However, Thailand is still facing the problem of encroachment on its maritime rights due to its abundant maritime resources and the consequential impacts of the region's current maritime security situations.

2.3 Shifting domestic security contexts

2.3.1 Security of the monarchical institution: The monarchy shall continue to play important roles as one of the key institutions of the Thai society. However, domestic and international political movements also continue to undermine the monarchy for their own benefits by making fault claims to smear and cause misunderstanding of the monarchical institution. These are sensitive issues that can cause conflicts among various groups within the Thai society. The close connection that the Thais have with their kings are continually weakened, especially among the Thai youth, due to their lack of understanding and recognition of the important roles of the institution as the focal point of the Thai society's morale and unity.

2.3.2. Internal conflicts: Thailand's political development is moving toward the political culture that demands more people participation in the decision-making process of government policies, especially the policies relating to the distribution of wealth and the management of key natural resources. They are expressed through the people's demand for political rights and civil liberty through the election process and the rights to protect their own interest or the local community's rights. While Thailand is experiencing major changes in its economic, social and political structures it is also facing structural problems caused by inherent economic and social inequality, unequal access to natural resources, corruption, injustice, inefficient public administration and different points of view of different groups of people. These are the push factors that lead to disparity of ideas between different groups of people which have become more apparent in recent years and resulted in violent political conflicts of increasingly complex nature. People tend to have lower level of tolerance and political conflicts have become a sensitive issue that pose a threat to the unity and immunity of the Thai society. However, there are no signs that in the near future political risks will escalate into the serious threats or political conflicts of the past periods. This is because the Thai people still want to maintain peace and social order. Key factors for the creation of social unity are: reduction of social inequality, equal access to the judicial process, human rights protection, elimination of corruption, promotion of democracy and people's participation in politics.

2.3.3 Situations in the Southern Border Provinces: Conflict in the Southern Border Provinces are highly complex, sensitive and multi-faceted issues caused by religious ideology, cultural and historical factors as well as injustice in the areas. The violent perpetrators with separatism ideology use the differences in religions and ethnic identities to justify their use of violence. The situations are further exacerbated by the problems of narcotics, complicate threats, the civil sector's influence, youth groups with different views from the State recruited to join their violent campaigns, international organization's roles and interventions as well as illegal trade and smuggling of goods. Situations in the Southern Border Provinces are improving with the introduction of the government policies to win the trust of local people and to promote tangible recognition and acceptance of a multicultural society.

2.3.4 Lack of confidence in governmental administration under the rule of law: Thailand is still facing structural problems that are not conducive to public administration under the rule of law, the lack of confidence in the leaders as well as the relatively centralized political and administrative structures that limit participation by other sectors in the society. Heightened levels of public corruption have resulted in people's distrust of the government while some people still find it acceptable. Public corruption undermines the moral and ethical foundations of the Thai society.

2.3.5 Drug problems: Drug problems continue to be one of the social problems that will continue to exist despite the level of national development. This problem is most serious among the vulnerable youth and children. Other drug-related problems are: crime, an increase in organized crime, uneven development, poverty, etc. The geographical location of Thailand makes its Northern and Northeastern borders vulnerable to transnational drug trafficking. The unique and constantly changing patterns of drug trafficking method and organization make it more difficult to prevent and suppress drug trafficking.

2.3.6 Natural disaster risks: Changing global weather patterns and global warming have become more severe with an increase in the world population. Moreover, economic-growth-oriented development also resulted in unregulated use of natural resources which created environment degradation and negative impacts on the ecosystem. Such changes have led to more frequent and severe natural disasters with more areas that are at risk of floods, storms, droughts, flash floods, landslides, tsunamis, coastal erosion, sinkholes and earthquakes. Floods and droughts, which have become increasingly more frequent and severe, are the two main disasters Thailand is facing. It is, therefore, necessary for Thailand to develop the capability, knowledge, skills, experiences and preparedness for efficient crisis and disaster management as well as the prevention, resolving and rehabilitation of the impacts of more severe crisis and natural disasters. There must also be more cooperation with the international community in the management of such disasters.

2.4 Shifting transborder security contexts

2.4.1 Shifting transnational threats: Transnational threats have rapidly and extensively increased with the emergence of globalization that affects the economy, politics, social systems and the national security of Thailand, especially the rise of terrorism and transnational crime. The driving force behind Thailand's terrorism threats is the compelling ideological conflicts that turn believers into various forms of terrorism from lone-actor to small cell terrorist. Major factors for terrorism are: economic, social and political injustice, ethnic and culture identity problems and religious ideology. International terrorist groups with no clear command structure are spreading their activities across the world and are leaning more toward urban terrorism.

International terrorist groups are also active in Southeast Asia, spreading violent ideologies and recruiting new followers. In Southeast Asia, terrorist attacks are carried out both by local terrorist groups that are inspired by international terrorist groups, and international terrorist groups that penetrate into this region by exploiting the vulnerability of countries' border security measures as well as using the Internet and social media communication to spread their ideologies. The primary target of these terrorist activities is the civilians while the secondary target group are government officials, police officers, soldiers, religious minority and other groups. Terrorist attacks can be either the bombing of the infrastructures or cyberattack. Although Thailand is not a direct target of international terrorist group, it is still essential to monitor possible terrorism risk, especially the risk of Thailand being used as a place of refuge and base for terrorist attack both within and outside the region as well as for urban terrorism.

Thailand is the key target for the transnational crimes of drug, human and arms trafficking, money laundering, piracy, economic crime, passport fraud trade as well as cybercrime. All countries regard cybercrime as their top priority and cyberattack is likely to become an integral part of future warfare. There is also a tendency for cybercrime to quickly expand and become difficult to control. The forms and techniques of cybercrime will become more advanced with the rapid progress of science and technology. At the same time, cybercrime law enforcement is still lacking, making it more convenient to commit cybercrime with the help of stronger organized crime network and state officials' involvement. The connection between terrorism and transnational crime tend to increase with less travelling restriction, the expanding tourism industry as well as the spread of violence ideologies and collaboration of groups with similar ideologies. Integrated security cooperation in ASEAN has been slow due to the different levels of law enforcement efficiency of each member countries.

2.4.2 Population movement: Population movement from neighboring countries into Thailand is mostly illegal and causes subsequent problems of how to discourage travelling and return them to their country. A large number of illegal migrants still find ways to remain in Thailand and causes international political problems, especially in the case of illegal migrants who have conflict with their own government. The main reasons for such migration are political; internal conflict in home country; and economic; different levels of economic development and quality of life. Thailand's increasing needs for foreign labor came with other problems such as health care, legal status and rights, education, conflict with Thai communities, human trafficking and other crimes, including Thailand's long-term economic competitiveness. In addition, there is a tendency for migrants to use Thailand as a transit point to enter another country.

This is due to Thailand's geographical location sharing borders with several countries. These problems are sensitive and have multidimensional impacts on security, human right and international relations.

2.4.3 Shifting contexts that create new forms of threats: The scope of current security threats is quite extensive and complex while having more direct impact on the people. New forms of security threats include the threats from changes in global economic, social and political situation, including threats from technological development and cyber interconnectivity that link the infrastructure, transportation, economic and financial systems together. Other sources of change come from climate change and other impacts caused by national development, including unrestricted use of natural resources, which result in food and water insecurity, natural resources and environmental degradation as well as conflicts in the acquiring of resources, threats from infectious diseases and emerging infectious diseases. These threats and risks result in conflicts between the people and state agencies. In addition, an increase in global energy needs affects Thailand's energy security in terms of its competition with other countries in the search for new energy sources, especially as Thailand now has to rely primarily on energy from foreign countries.

Part 3 : National Security Policy and Plan

3.1 Conceptual framework

3.1.1 Framework 1 – Legal provisions

The Constitution of the Kingdom of Thailand, B.E. 2560 (2017): Article 52 of the Constitution of the Kingdom of Thailand stipulates that the State shall protect and uphold the monarchical institution, independence, sovereignty, integrity of the territories and the areas over which Thailand has the sovereignty rights, honor and interest of the Nation, security of the State, and public order. For these purposes, the State shall provide efficient military, diplomatic, and intelligence services. The armed forces shall also be deployed for the purpose of national development.

The National Security Council Act, B.E. 2559 (2016) Section 13 of this Act stipulates that the National Security Policy and Plan shall be established as the principal framework or direction for the protection, warning, resolution or suppression of threats and the safeguarding of national security.

The National Strategy Preparation Act, B.E. 2560 (2017) Section 5 of this Act stipulates that the National Strategy shall be established with the goals of promoting sustainable national development in accordance with the principle of good governance and the framework for the preparation of consistent and integrated plans to constitute a driving force towards such goals, within the period of time set out in the National Strategy which must not be less than twenty years.

The National Strategy shall be promulgated by a Royal Command and shall come into force upon its publication in the Government Gazette, and all State agencies have the duty of implementing them for the purpose of achieving the goals set out therein.

Determination of policies on the administration of State affairs by the Cabinet before assuming the administration of State affairs, preparation of the National Economic and Social Development Plan, the National Security Policy and Plan and any other plans, including the preparation of the annual appropriations shall be made in consistency with the National Strategy.

3.1.2 Framework 2 – Adopting the King’s Philosophies as the principles for security operation: These philosophies are, for example, the “Understanding, Reaching out and Developing” strategy, the Sufficiency Economy Philosophy and the New Agriculture Theory as the principles for security operation.

3.1.3 Framework 3 – The importance of comprehensive security: This framework recognizes the importance of various dimensions such as human security, freedom from fear, freedom from want and the importance of state security in the national development that is in line with the people’s happiness and national security. Therefore, the policies, strategies, master plans, and action plans are prepared with the focus on the promotion of national resilience and preparedness against threats or security problems, fairness and reduction of inequality, and financial stability to ensure continuous economic expansion, equal and comprehensive income distribution as well as promoting economic growth for sustainable development that is environmentally-friendly.

3.1.4 Framework 4 – Relationship between the National Strategy and the National Security Plan and strategies of relevant agencies: This framework focuses on the National Strategy (2018 - 2037), the Master Plan under the 20 – Year National Strategy on Security, the Master Plan under the 20 – Year National Strategy on relevant aspects, the 12th National Economic and Social Development Plan (2017 – 2022), especially Strategy 5: Promotion of national security for the country’s prosperity, and other relevant strategies, including the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals (UN SDGs)

3.1.5 Framework 5 – State-Civil cooperation: Promoting the state- civil cooperation (state agencies, the private sector, the civil society sector, local community and the academic sector) in security promotion/protection and the strengthening of security through community security plans, district/provincial/provincial group/regional development plans as well as the ministerial/department and administration of the state affairs plans, under the Whole-of-Nation-Approach in which all sectors join forces in implementing security operation.

3.1.6 Framework 6 – Internal security: This framework gives significance to the national preparedness against changes and their impacts by taking into consideration current and future situations. It aims to promote peaceful society where people can enjoy education, employment, income, life and property security, including efficient systems for the observation, monitoring, warning and risk management.

3.1.7 Framework 7 – Maintaining a balanced international system and Thailand’s relations with other countries: This framework aims to create balance and creative roles of Thailand in seeking bilateral, sub-regional, regional and global cooperation with friendly countries on the basis of trust and strategic partnership with the view, perspective, and attitude of goodwill toward neighboring countries at individual and government levels. It aims to seek cooperation or activities that promote friendship rather than historical conflicts or disputes. It also gives significance to the development of all levels of cooperation with the goal of advancing development together.

3.2 Definition

3.2.1 “National Security” means the situation in which the country is free from any threat to its independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity, the religious institution, the monarchical institution, public safety and peaceful livelihood that may affect the national interest or its democratic regime of government with the King as Head of State. It also means the country’s preparedness to confront all types of threat situations.

3.2.2 “National Security Policy and Plan” means the key policy and plan that provide a framework or direction for the prevention, warning, mitigation or suppression of security threats to safeguard the national security.

3.2.3 “Threat” means the state or situation leading to the state of insecurity or serious and complicated security problems which, if not rectified, shall have pervasive impact on the national security.

3.3 National interests

3.3.1 Independence, sovereignty and integrity of the state territories.

3.3.2 Stability and sustainability of the country’s key national institutions.

3.3.3 Security of the country and its people from all types of threats.

3) Key responsible agencies for specific strategy. These agencies are the key drivers of each strategy and the focal points for the operational integration of different joint responsible agencies/organizations and member institutes of the relevant network. They are also responsible for the reporting and evaluation of the overall performance of the relevant strategy. In addition, key responsible agencies for each strategy can assign additional support agencies as deemed appropriate.

4) Joint responsible agencies/ member institutes of the relevant network. These are the agencies whose roles and responsibilities are partially relevant to such mission/powers and duties or whose mission, by nature, supports the National Security Policy or Plan implementation or whose secondary mission is to support the key responsible agency who hosts the operational integration of a specific issue in the National Security Policy or Plan or who is the key responsible agency for a specific strategy.

4.3 Criteria and procedures for the preparation of specific security strategy or plan. Such criteria appear in the Notification of the National Security Council Re: Criteria and procedures for the preparation of specific security strategy or plan and the formulation of relevant operational plans or projects to the National Security Policy and Plan.

4.3.1 The objectives of a specific security strategy or plan must be for the prevention, resolution and mitigation of security risks, threats and impacts or the creation of resilience for a specific security issue in the National Strategy, the National Security Policy and Plan or as assigned by the National Security Council.

4.3.2 In the case where a specific security strategy or plan is prepared from the security issue stipulated in the National Strategy, the National Security Policy and Plan or as assigned by the National Security Council or where a host agency for its preparation is specifically assigned by the law, the said agency must report the outcome of such performance to the National Security Council for acknowledgement. In the case where a security issue is under the responsibilities or several agencies or where no specific responsible agency has been assigned, the National Security Council or the Cabinet shall assign the task of preparing specific security strategy or to a particular agency with the Office of the National Security Council as the key responsible agency or to any other agency or different agencies for joint operation.

4.3.3 Conduct security situation assessment based on the information and opinions provided by the academic division of relevant state agencies, the relevant sectors and by the people.

4.3.4 The prepared security strategy or plan must include the principle, rationale, objectives, strategic goals, indicators, strategies, operational guidelines or methods, performance monitoring and evaluation guidelines. Such strategy/plan must take the risk management principles into consideration, especially the risk or damage to specific security strategy or plan or support project as well as the connection or impact of the security operation on various development aspects. For example, 1) National competitiveness, 2) Human capital capacity, 3) Social opportunity and equality, 4) Natural resource and environmental sustainability and 5) Public administration system.

4.4 Determination of national security plans or flagship projects. Section 16 of the National Security Council Act, B.E. 2559 (2016) stipulates that the Budget Bureau shall allocate budgets to state agencies in compliance with the National Security Policy and Plan for implementation of the national security plans or flagship projects. The relevant state agencies shall submit such plan or project to the Office of the National Security Council for consideration and opinions, and the state agencies with the budget allocation powers and responsibilities must take such opinions into consideration when allocating budgets. Key security plan or flagship project shall be determined by the Cabinet.

4.5 Success factors

4.5.1 The government give importance and continuing support to the implementation of the National Security Policy and Plan (2019 – 2022). The government provides continuous resources support to the relevant ministries, departments and agencies for their implementation of the missions that are consistent with the National Security Policy and Plan and endorses resolutions to their implementation obstacles.

4.5.2 Preparedness of the relevant ministries, departments and agencies for the implementation of the National Security Policy and Plan (2019 – 2022). These ministries, departments and agencies must clearly determine the focal point or responsible person body for security implementation, at the administrative and operational levels. They must prepare plans/projects, especially the key security plans or flagship projects, and specify allocated budgets and support measures to ensure systematic and efficient plan/project management.

4.5.3 The civil society sector’s recognition and support for the shifting security contexts. Other sectors such as the academic sector, the private sector, the civil society sector and the people sector are provided with the opportunity to closely participate as member of the partnership network in applying the National Security Policy and Plan to practice.
